Global presence - We are where you are

On its way to become a superpower

China is one of the largest markets in the world. Driven by the dynamics of its more than 1.3 billion inhabitants, China currently ranks second in the list of largest economies worldwide after the USA. The economic outlook for China is very promising in the long run. Experts predict that China will take the place of the USA as an economic superpower within the next few years.

Be it mergers or take-overs in China, transfer pricing arrangements or Chinese real estate law - there are numerous challenges waiting for you when you intend to invest or want to expand your business activities in China. Additionally, Chinese regulations on customs duties and classifications of goods present a considerable savings potential for foreign investors.

The Chinese tax system is characterized by a high complexity, a wide scope for interpretation, and permanent comprehensive changes due to tax reforms.

When planning future activities in China, the continuous revocation of preferential tax treatments for foreign companies and individuals, recent changes in China's turnover tax regime, and the implementation of the OECD's BEPS action plans shall absolutely be taken into account.
